FINISH LINE

A Mid-Pack Victory by Joel B. Braunstein, M.D.

It's marathon day in Hopkinton. As I anxiously wait for the gun to sound, I size up my opponents.

I meet a man from Nevada who tells me this is his seventh Boston and only a training run for his Hawaii Ironman later this year. He seems so confident. "He's a definite contender," I think. But I notice his knee pads and hope I might be able to take him.

Out of the corner of my eye, I spot another man. He has ripped muscles, mirror sunglasses, and bronzed, leathery skin. When winning Boston. Not even close.

At mile 13 I funnel into Wellesley's Screech Tunnel and hear the deafening roar of students from the all-women's college. I'm ignited, believing they're cheering just for me. But reality sets in again when a woman wearing a Wellesley College shirt flies past me.

I find Mr. Nevada at mile 14. He's gasping for breath and barely manages to say, "Good to see you." He's limping badly and if he could move any slower, he'd be standing still. I urge him on. He replies, "Just a little cramp. Happens all the time during my Ironmans. I'll slow down for a moment. Catch you in a bit."

I never see him again.

The Newton Hills at mile 17 don't greet me with the comfortable familiarity I'd expected. Previously on target for a personal record, I'm forced to rethink my position. "PR: Pitiful Run" is the only thing that comes to mind. My right calf has gone into a painful spasm. I want to cry. What will these people think when they see a grown man cry?

By some miracle of fate, I make it to Brookline. This is where my family and friends planned to cheer for me at the front of the pack. When I finally see my wife at mile 24, she gently informs me that the Kenyans finished nearly an hour ago. "Not to worry," she adds. "You're already a winner!"

Somehow despite my slow time and aching body, I realize she's right. My rubbery legs carry me over the finish line. Mr. Muscles #11445 drags himself across just after me. I help a race volunteer lift him into a wheelchair and offer to place an IV in his arm. After he gets hydrated and has his finisher's medal around his neck, he'll show up at the race next year, I'm sure.

I'm delighted when I spot my lady friend wearing the "Race for the Cure" shirt. She tells me she finished strong and smiles brilliantly. We chat briefly and then part ways. I never learn her name, but that's okay. There's always someone like her who symbolizes the true meaning of the marathon. R

Joel B. Braunstein, M.D., is a physician at Brigham and Women's Hospital in Boston, Mass. He trains on the marathon route, but says it never helps on Patriots' Day.

he catches me staring at him, he shoots back an aggressive grimace. "Maybe he's one of the elite runners," I think. Then I look at his bib number—11445—and change my mind.

Next I meet a woman standing beside me. Instead of flashy sports attire, she wears a simple shirt that reads, "Race for the Cure." She offers me a warm smile and wishes me good luck.

The gun fires and the stampede of runners begins.

The race starts very fast, but I feel good. So good, in fact, that I entertain the thought of actually winning this event. I visualize the journalists clamoring to ask me questions and the laurel wreath on my head after I break the tape. Unfortunately I trail behind a man dressed as Elvis, complete with a white bell-bottomed outfit and a cardboard guitar that he plays as he runs. As the space widens between us, reality sets in: I won't be

Be A Better Skier, Basic Cross-Country Skiing Technique

By Chris DuVal

My introduction to skiing was a trip down the bunny hill at a small ski area on a local farmer's land. Unfortunately, I hadn't taken the time to learn how to turn or stop before my first outing. Unfortunately, the bunny hill fed directly into the expert hill. Fortunately, somehow, I stayed upright and didn't crash into any trees or other skiers.

After that first run I thought, "This is for me.", but I need to learn a few of the finer points, like turning and stopping. Most of the advice I got from my friends took the form of, "Just point em down hill and go fast." Eventually I found some teachers who could actually teach some technique, and it made a world of difference. Knowing some of the basics made skiing more fun and opened up other options, expert runs, back-country and cross-country skiing.

The most common technique used in cross-country (X-C) skiing is the diagonal stride. Diagonal refers to the movement of arms and legs, just as in walking or running. In fact, this is a good place to begin. Set your ski poles aside for now, put on your skis and simply walk. Work on the coordination of your arms with your legs. Try to make it feel as natural as walking, even though you have two long boards attached to your feet. Once you figure out walking, pick up the speed a little and jog/shuffle. Again, no poles, focus on easy coordination of arms and legs. With each step, try to get a little glide, even a couple of inches for now. The best spot for no pole practice is a straight 50-100 yard stretch with a good track to ski in.

Many beginners rely on their poles for balance and never develop a smooth, easy stride. Once you get the hang of gliding without poles, add the poles for an extra push, like the after burner on a fighter jet. A little (5-10 min.) no pole skiing every time you go out is a good way to improve quickly.

Many non-runners become runners by using a walk-jog-run approach. (I did.) This works for skiing as well. Practice your technique with a slow shuffle, pick it up to a jog, then a run pace. Drop it down when your form goes out the window. Try it with and without poles. For an added twist, do it on one ski only, ie: push off with your left foot (no ski) glide on your right (ski). As you become more comfortable, throw in some fartlek/speed play, but never sacrifice good timing for speed, that will come naturally with a more coordinated stride.

Hills are a different challenge. For smaller hills, just pick up your pace, shorten your stride and motor over the top. To go up a steeper hill, use the herringbone or the side step. The side step is slower, but will work on even the steepest hills. It is accomplished by standing sideways to the hill and stepping up, using your ski edges to dig into the snow.

The herringbone is a quicker and more efficient way to climb most hills. In the herringbone you create a V with your skis, tips apart, tails together. The inside edges of your skis bite into the snow as you climb. The steeper the hill, the more the tips are separated, bringing of the ski edge to bear against the fall line of the hill.

To slow down or stop when going down hill, you use a different type of V, the snowplow. In the snowplow, the tips are together, but not touching, the tails apart, opposite of the herringbone. The inside edges dig in to slow your descent. A word of caution, the snowplow doesn't work very well once you pick up some speed, X-C skis don't have metal edges like downhill skis. When in doubt about a hill, take off your skis and walk down, you can conquer it next time. And if you do find yourself speeding down a hill, out of control, about to hit a big tree, don't panic, sit down. As my grandma used to say, "Sit down before you fall down."

If the snowplow works for you, try some snowplow turns. A snowplow turn starts like a snowplow stop, but you dig in one ski, or the other, to turn. Pushing down on the left ski, with the inside edge biting the snow, will make you go right. Pushing the right, you go left. Remember, you're going down hill with the tips together, left ski pointed right, right ski pointing left. For a little extra style, you can hop your non-turning ski and make a stem-christie turn or a very cool hockey stop.

Anyone can put on a pair of X-C skis and have fun, provided they stay within their skill level. But whatever your level, ski drills and technique work will pay off and make skiing even more fun. Just as swimmers improve with drill work vs. slogging out endless junk laps, skiers improve with practice. Keep at it, make it fun and you'll be surprised at how much farther and faster you will be able to go.

FAST-N-FIT FOODS

Chicken and Walnut Couscous Salad with Apples

Prep. Time: 15 mins.

Cook Time: 15 mins.

Ingredients:

3 boneless, skinless, chicken breasts
salt to taste
black pepper
2 cups water
1/4 cup olive oil
3 Tablespoons lemon juice
2 cups dry couscous
2 apples, cored and diced
1/2 cup golden raisins, seedless
1/2 cup toasted, chopped walnuts
2 Tablespoons chopped parsley

Cooking Instructions:

Preheat the grill or broiler to medium-high.
Season the chicken breasts with the salt and pepper.
Grill or broil them until they are cooked through, about 6 mins. each side.
In a large saucepan, combine the water, olive oil, lemon juice, and a generous pinch of salt and bring to a boil.
Remove from heat, stir in the couscous, cover and let stand off the heat for 5 mins. Fluff the couscous with a fork. Add the apples, raisins, walnuts, and parsley and stir to combine. Transfer the couscous mixture to a serving platter. Slice the cooked chicken and arrange it on top of the couscous.

The Jingle Bell Run/Walk for Arthritis held at Shapiro

Developmental in Kankakee on December 8, 2003 had another record turnout of runners and walkers. Every year it grows in popularity.

I recently spoke with Therese Cardosi of the Kankakee Chapter of the Arthritis Foundation and she would like to thank all the KRRC Members who helped contribute to the record turnout. She said they were very pleased with the numerous participants, however, they were caught off guard by so many race-day registrants. She and Phil Angelo have made a couple of changes for this year's race.

To avoid a timing conflict with another activity at Shapiro, the race date has been moved to one week later. This year's race date is Sunday, December 14th. This date change will allow the use of Shapiro's gym, which is a much larger area for pre and post-race activities and is in the same general area as last year's registration building. Registration and awards will be held in the gym and there will be bleachers to sit on.

Therese hopes to see everyone back again this December and hopes that these changes will make for a more enjoyable event. Marcia Loneragan
